Cynthia McClintock is professor of political science and international affairs at George Washington University. A leading authority on democracy and revolution in Latin America, she earned her Ph.D. from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, has conducted extensive field research in Central and South America since the early 1970s, and has acted as an elections monitor in both El Salvador and Peru. She has analyzed current political events for a variety of research institutes, for numerous television and radio networks, and for the U.S. State Department and Congress. A former consultant to Inter-American Dialogue and former president of the Inter-American Council, she served in 1994–95 as president of the Latin American Studies Association, an international scholarly association of more than four thousand members. McClintock has contributed numerous articles to edited volumes and to scholarly journals such as World Politics and Comparative Politics; her books include Peasant Cooperatives and Political Change in Peru (1981) and The Peruvian Experiment Reconsidered (coeditor; published in English in 1983 and in Spanish in 1985). McClintock received a Fulbright Award in 1987 and was a peace fellow at the United States Institute of Peace in 1990–91.

United States Institute of Peace

The United States Institute of Peace is an independent, nonpartisan federal institution created by Congress to promote research, education, and training on the peaceful resolution of international conflicts. Established in 1984, the Institute meets its congressional mandate through an array of programs, including research grants, fellowships, professional training programs, conferences and workshops, library services, publications, and other educational activities. The Institute's Board of Directors is appointed by the President of the United States and confirmed by the Senate.

Jennings Randolph Program for International Peace

This book is a fine example of the work produced by senior fellows in the Jennings Randolph fellowship program of the United States Institute of Peace. As part of the statute establishing the Institute, Congress envisioned a program that would appoint "scholars and leaders of peace from the United States and abroad to pursue scholarly inquiry and other appropriate forms of communication on international peace and conflict resolution." The program was named after Senator Jennings Randolph of West Virginia, whose efforts over four decades helped to establish the Institute.

Since 1987, the Jennings Randolph Program has played a key role in the Institute's effort to build a national center of research, dialogue, and education on critical problems of conflict and peace. More than a hundred senior fellows from some thirty nations have carried out projects on the sources and nature of violent international conflict and the ways such conflict can be peacefully managed or resolved. Fellows come from a wide variety of academic and other professional backgrounds. They conduct research at the Institute and participate in the Institute's outreach activities to policymakers, the academic community, and the American public.

Each year approximately fifteen senior fellows are in residence at the Institute. Fellowship recipients are selected by the Institute's board of directors in a competitive process. For further information on the program, or to receive an application form, please contact the program staff at (202) 457-1700.
