About the Gender and Peacebuilding Center

Recognizing the importance and need for progress in women's contributions to peacebuilding, the United States Institute of Peace (USIP) established the Gender and Peacebuilding Center. The Center coordinates USIP's gender-related work. It aims to inform and expand critical understanding about the impact of gender; convene global experts on gender, conflict, and peacebuilding; contribute to policy development through analytical and practitioner work on gender, conflict, and peacebuilding; and enhance the role of women in peacebuilding by educating and training both men and women. Over the past twenty-five years, USIP has engaged in or supported more than one hundred projects related to women, conflict, and peacebuilding. The establishment of the Gender and Peacebuilding Center reflects the Institute's commitment to gender awareness in both its analytical and practitioner work on conflict and peacebuilding.

About the United States Institute of Peace

The United States Institute of Peace is an independent, nonpartisan, national institution established and funded by Congress. Its goals are to help prevent and resolve violent international conflicts; promote post-conflict stability and development; and increase conflict management capacity, tools, and intellectual capital worldwide. The Institute pursues this mission by empowering others with knowledge, skills, and resources, as well as by directly engaging in peacebuilding efforts around the globe.
