Raymond Cohen is professor of international relations at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem. He was a fellow at the United States Institute of Peace in 1988–89 and again in 1996, where he conducted much of the research for Negotiating Across Cultures. A specialist in the areas of diplomatic negotiations and intercultural communications, Cohen has published articles in numerous journals and is the author of four other books: Culture and Conflict in Egyptian-Israeli Relations; Theatre of Power; International Politics: Rules of the Game; and Threat Perception in International Crisis. He has studied at Oxford University and Lancaster University, and received his Ph.D. in international relations from the Hebrew University.

United States Institute of Peace

The United States Institute of Peace is an independent, nonpartisan federal institution created and funded by Congress to promote research, education, and training on the peaceful resolution of international conflicts. Established in 1984, the Institute meets its congressional mandate through an array of programs, including research grants, fellowships, professional training programs, conferences and workshops, library services, publications, and other educational activities. The Institute's Board of Directors is appointed by the President of the United States and confirmed by the Senate.

Jennings Randolph Program for International Peace

This book is a fine example of the work produced by senior fellows in the Jennings Randolph fellowship program of the United States Institute of Peace. As part of the statute establishing the Institute, Congress envisioned a program that would appoint “scholars and leaders of peace from the United States and abroad to pursue scholarly inquiry and other appropriate forms of communication on international peace and conflict resolution.” The program was named after Senator Jennings Randolph of West Virginia, whose efforts over four decades helped to establish the Institute.

Since 1987, the Jennings Randolph Program has played a key role in the Institute’s effort to build a national center of research, dialogue, and education on critical problems of conflict and peace. More than a hundred senior fellows from some thirty nations have carried out projects on the sources and nature of violent international conflict and the ways such conflict can be peacefully managed or resolved. Fellows come from a wide variety of academic and other professional backgrounds. They conduct research at the Institute and participate in the Institute’s outreach activities to policymakers, the academic community, and the American public.

Each year approximately fifteen senior fellows are in residence at the Institute. Fellowship recipients are selected by the Institute’s board of directors in a competitive process. For further information on the program, or to receive an application form, please contact the program staff at (202) 457-1700.
