Igor Zevelev is professor of Russian studies at the George C. Marshall European Center for Security Studies in Garmisch, Germany, following his position as head research associate at the Institute of World Economy and International Relations (IMEMO) of the Russian Academy of Sciences, which he also served as deputy director of its Center for Developing Countries. Professor Zevelev has also been a distinguished visiting professor at the University of California, Berkeley; the Jackson School of International Studies at the University of Washington; and Macalester College in St. Paul, Minnesota. He was a fellow at the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars in Washington, D.C. in 1996–97. During 1997–98, he was a senior fellow at the United States Institute of Peace, where he completed the research for this study. Among Professor Zevelev's other published works are Global Security Beyond the Millennium: American and Russian Perspectives (co-edited with Sharyl Cross), Urbanization and Development in Asia, and Southeast Asia: Urbanization and Problems of Social Development (1985). He holds doctorates in history from Moscow State University and in political science from IMEMO.

United States Institute of Peace

The United States Institute of Peace is an independent, nonpartisan federal institution created by Congress to promote research, education, and training on the peaceful management and resolution of international conflicts. Established in 1984, the Institute meets its congressional mandate through an array of programs, including research grants, fellowships, professional training, education programs from high school through graduate school, conferences and workshops, library services, and publications. The Institute's Board of Directors is appointed by the President of the United States and confirmed by the Senate.

Jennings Randolph Program for International Peace

This book is a fine example of the work produced by senior fellows in the Jennings Randolph fellowship program of the United States Institute of Peace. As part of the statute establishing the Institute, Congress envisioned a program that would appoint “scholars and leaders of peace from the United States and abroad to pursue scholarly inquiry and other appropriate forms of communication on international peace and conflict resolution.” The program was named after Senator Jennings Randolph of West Virginia, whose efforts over four decades helped to establish the Institute.

Since 1987, the Jennings Randolph Program has played a key role in the Institute’s effort to build a national center of research, dialogue, and education on critical problems of conflict and peace. Nearly two hundred senior fellows from some thirty nations have carried out projects on the sources and nature of violent international conflict and the ways such conflict can be peacefully managed or resolved. Fellows come from a wide variety of academic and other professional backgrounds. They conduct research at the Institute and participate in the Institute’s outreach activities to policymakers, the academic community, and the American public.

Each year approximately fifteen senior fellows are in residence at the Institute. Fellowship recipients are selected by the Institute’s board of directors in a competitive process. For further information on the program, or to receive an application form, please contact the program staff at (202) 457-1700, or visit our web site at www.usip.org.
