About the Author

Princeton N. Lyman has over three decades of diplomatic experience in both the U.S. Department of State and the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID). He was U.S. ambassador to South Africa from 1992 through 1995, and has served as assistant secretary of state for international organization affairs, as ambassador to Nigeria, and as director of the U.S. Aid Mission to Ethiopia at USAID. He was a senior fellow at the United States Institute of Peace in 1999–2000, and had previously been a visiting fellow with the Overseas Development Council. Lyman is currently the executive director of the Global Interdependence Initiative, Aspen Institute. He is the coauthor of Korean Development: The Interplay of Politics and Economics and has written numerous articles, including “South Africa’s Promise,” “Ethics in Diplomacy,” and “Saving the UN Security Council: A Challenge for the United States.” His honors include the President’s Distinguished Service Award, the Department of State Distinguished Honor Award, and the Secretary of State’s Career Achievement Award. Lyman holds a Ph.D. in political science from Harvard University.

United States Institute of Peace

The United States Institute of Peace is an independent, nonpartisan federal institution created by Congress to promote research, education, and training on the peaceful management and resolution of international conflicts. Established in 1984, the Institute meets its congressional mandate through an array of programs, including research grants, fellowships, professional training, education programs from high school through graduate school, conferences and workshops, library services, and publications. The Institute's Board of Directors is appointed by the President of the United States and confirmed by the Senate.

Jennings Randolph Program for International Peace

This book is a fine example of the work produced by senior fellows in the Jennings Randolph fellowship program of the United States Institute of Peace. As part of the statute establishing the Institute, Congress envisioned a program that would appoint “scholars and leaders of peace from the United States and abroad to pursue scholarly inquiry and other appropriate forms of communication on international peace and conflict resolution.” The program was named after Senator Jennings Randolph of West Virginia, whose efforts over four decades helped to establish the Institute.

Since 1987, the Jennings Randolph Program has played a key role in the Institute’s effort to build a national center of research, dialogue, and education on critical problems of conflict and peace. More than a hundred senior fellows from some thirty nations have carried out projects on the sources and nature of violent international conflict and the ways such conflict can be peacefully managed or resolved. Fellows come from a wide variety of academic and other professional backgrounds. They conduct research at the Institute and participate in the Institute’s outreach activities to policymakers, the academic community, and the American public.

Each year approximately fifteen senior fellows are in residence at the Institute. Fellowship recipients are selected by the Institute’s board of directors in a competitive process. For further information on the program, or to receive an application form, please contact the program staff at (202) 457-1700.
