About the Author

Dov Lynch is a research fellow at the European Union Institute for Security Studies, an EU agency launched in January 2002 to provide policy expertise for the European Union's European Security and Defence Policy. At the EU Institute, Lynch directs research on security developments concerning Russia and the former Soviet Union; he devotes particular attention to developing an EU strategy for the South Caucasus and to the European Union's strategic partnership with Russia.

Lynch graduated in Soviet Studies from Yale and has a doctorate in international relations from St. Antony's College, University of Oxford. He has a tenured lectureship at the Department of War Studies, King's College London, and has been a research fellow at St. Antony's College and at the Royal Institute of International Affairs, Russia and Eurasia Programme. His major publications include Russia Faces Europe (2003) and Russian Peacekeeping Strategies towards the CIS (2000), and he coedited Energy in the Caspian Region (2002) and The Euro-Asian World: A Period of Transition (2000). His articles have appeared in International Affairs, the Washington Quarterly, World Today, and European Security.

United States Institute of Peace

The United States Institute of Peace is an independent, nonpartisan federal institution created by Congress to promote the prevention, management, and peaceful resolution of international conflicts.
